On Conditionals In The Greek Conditional Sentences in Greek. Greek has various types of conditional sentences ('conditionals'). Different combinations of moods lead to different presentations of a conditional relationship in time and likelihood. The first important distinction is that between once-off conditionals ('if X happens, then Y'), and conditionals that suggest general, repeatable/repeated circumstances ('if anytime X, then always Y'). Conditional Sentences in Greek In order to indicate this kind of relationship between the protasis and apodosis, Classical Greek traditional had four kinds of conditional sentences, based upon what tense and mood the verb occurs in and upon some helping words. These are much the same in Koine (Biblical) Greek, with slight variations.
